WHO/WHAT AM I?

Last month's answer: The Harmonicats.

Who/What am I? I was the “Mean widdle kid” in a skit on my 1950’s T.V. show.

Stupid things I have done

During my time in Los Angeles/Hollywood I enrolled in Jack Causman’s Acting Studios. This is where I spent my off time when my buddy wasn’t off on an audition. He was there too. One day we met a couple of guys from New York City. There was David, who insisted on being called David, not Dave; because his mother named him David. The other was Bart, he called himself “Black Bart” after the Disney cartoon character. So, we all got to be good friends and usually got together at a club on Sunset Blvd. called “Filthy McNasty’s”. Don’t let the name fool you. One day my buddy and David had auditions at Paramount and that usually took a better part of the day. So, Bart suggested that he and I go out to an old ghost town in the desert that used to be owned by Republic pictures. One where John Wayne, William S. Heart, even Tom Mix and other “old timers” made movies (more on that another time). We were going to do shots for Bart’s western portfolio. He wanted very much to do a western, but there were not many parts in westerns for black people back then. We got our western gear and headed out into the desert. An hour or so later we pulled up outside the saloon and pulled around the corner to hide the station wagon, so it wouldn’t accidentally get into a picture. What a day, we used three rolls of film. Finally we decided to get out of the heat and went into the saloon and looked around. There were full bottles behind the bar, but they were replicas of the original ones. “Hey Bart, I think this is a live set” I told him. He was behind the bar. “Yup, I think you are right, there’s a couple of dynamite boxes back here” he replied. I said, “let’s get out of here.” “Nah, its only props here, I’ll show you”; no sooner did he say that when we heard a voice outside yelling “Hey, you are trespassing!” I looked outside and saw a security guard running out of the hotel. “Hey Bart, we’ve been caught.” We went out and the guard told us this was a live set and we had to leave. Bart told him about the dynamite props and the guard told him it was real and for the final scene. Again Bart said “no, they are only props, real dynamite is red. Here I’ll show you.” With that, he asked for my .45, which I always carried (legally for my job). We went out and pulled one box and set it in the doorway of the saloon. Stupid! Stupid! Stupid! We went across the street and hid behind a watering trough and “not so smart me, took my .45 and fired at the box. There were wood splinters, dirt, and I think I even saw ghosts of old gunfighters shaking their fists at us. When everything was settling down, all I could say was “props, props?!” “Dynamite isn’t red you stupid dumbbell!” Bart looked at me and all he could get out was “oops” in a very tiny voice. The security guard? Well all he could say was “ooooh S—t.” When we all calmed down we sorted out our stories, I showed the guard by I.D. He got on the radio and called his boss, “Hey Don, the whole damn saloon exploded.” On the other end “Hell, I told them not to keep that damn dynamite there, too hot.” “Well I guess I’ll have them send out the grips – oh are you ok?” To which he replied, “Yup, Ok.” We promptly left; what a day!

SIDE NOTE: Dynamite in those days was a very light beige color and had nitro in it, causing it to sweat.

Our friend David was under contract with MGM as a bit player on the T.V. show “Police woman” starring Angie Dickenson and Earl Hollaman. He also did bit parts in the show “Baretta”, starring Robert Blake. He even starred in “Magnum Force” as a bank robber with Clint Eastwood. I was able to meet all of these people. Bart was only cast for extra parts. Like me, his acting wasn’t that great’ but that didn’t stop him.

Next month “My 15 minutes of fame as a model:

These are all true stories of my life experiences – not embellished!
